FAIRBANK'S

Patent Platform and Counter Scales, warranted.

THE Manufacturers have brought these balances to a very great degree of perfection, and in their various modifications have adapted them to all the purposes for which not only light but heavy transactions are required by weight. In the mechanical construction, care is taken to secure cyransorm, branklity and accuracy—accuracy, not merely at a specific point to a given amount, but uniform accuracy at every angle of the platform, and throughout the entire range from the lowest to the highest—capacity of the Balance

The modifications for stores, warehouses. &c., are got up with reference to compactness and convenience, as well as permanency and accuracy. These are wholly metalic, and are either portable or dormant. Portable scales are made to weigh 290, 500, 700, 1000, 1500 and 2000 lbs. Counter scales, from 1 an oz. to 28 lbs. Dormant scales, to be placed in and form a part of the floor, weighing 2000, 2500, 3000 lbs. Dormant scales, with iron levers, new and beautiful models for weighing loaded wagons, Raitroad Cars, and heavy merchandize, drawing from 1 to 20 tons. Moveable scales on wheels 2000 and 3000 lbs.

These scales keep their adjustment perfectly—are never liable to wheels 2000 and 3000 lbs.

These scales keep their adjustment perfectly—are never liable to derangement, and seldom to any expense for repairs. They are in use in most of the Railroads in the U. S. and in some of them they have been long in use, the operation being perfect. So, also, in the dormant and portable scales for weighing merchandise, Merchants and others who have had them in constant use for a succession of years, testfy to their uniform accuracy, and to the fact that they appear unaffected by wear. Trinidad were collected together at the head of Calle de Guiterez, discussing the various topies of the day, in which is the probable rise and fall of the prices of sugar and molasses was decidedly the most interesting. Amongst the group, were the keen looking Catalonian, the blunt Bicayan, and vivacious Andalusian—emigrants from the mother country, in the pursuit of wealth;—the joke was bandled about in that boisterous vein so peculiar to the Spaniard, interrupted occasionally by the presence of a passing signoria, with flowing mantilia, the only covering to her head, when compliments would fall freely from the lips of all.—Far from being offended, the lady appeared to consider it as a just tribute to her personal charms—would reply with great gravity, muchissimos graciss, Caballeros—and pass on, with the grace and dignity of a queen. A Montero, upon a mettled pacer, darted up to the door, and saluted the group with that natural air of polite respect from which a true Spaniard never departs.

"Seneral Caballeros—discussed in the contract of the contract group with that natural air of polite respect from which a true Spaniard never departs.

"Senores Caballeros; dios guard ustedes." "Gentlemen, God he with you—what do you think of the weather" "It looks bad enough," replied one; "we shall have it tough and strong—the mountain passes are dark as aight, with heavy clouds."

"Yes," said another, "and the sea means, and heaves upon Pedro Bianco in a way that forbodes a hurricane."

The sea did present a strange and unnatural appearance, covered—almost obscured—by masses of vapor rolling over the surface. The atmosphere was so perfectly ealm that the flames of a candle burnt as steady in the open air as if enclosed within a chrystal vase. All were now busy speculisting upon the indications of the heavens with the exception of one, to whom calms and storms apparently were alike indifferent.

she still hold on?"

"Si, Senor."

"And how's the cruiser?"

"Oh, tight enough—with four anchors out—two chain cables. She'll founder at her anchors if this gale increases."

"We can paddle under the lee of the mangrove bushes off the strip of land over the otherside of the harbour, till we form to the Fort then before the wind, you pulling, I bailing; in three minutes we can fetch the slaver, once on board Pli show you we can save her."

Still Annoin doubted, wavered; all the eloquence of argument, and stout assurances with scorn of danger, appeared not in the least to stagger his determination to decline the perilous adventure.

"Lend me your boat, then. By Heaven! I'll go alone; and when I meet you to morrow, with five thousand Spanish doubleons in my chest, you'll curse yourself for not have Seated upon the counter, with abstracted air and folded arms, kicking his heels against the boards; there was an air of recklessness about the youth that plainly told his fortune to be desperate, and that he was at that very moment turning over in his mind the probable chances of success for a dinner, already having failed in procuring a breakfast. The light-blue eye, fair hair, and ruddy complexion disclosed at a glance his Anglo-Saxon blood, and as he gazed at the dark eyed, sun burnt features that surrounded him, there was an expression which seemed to say—"the tit blow the dark eyed, sun burnt features that surrounded him, there was an expression which seemed to say—"let it blow the whole island over to Africa for aught I care; I have neither kith nor kin here, and am as pennyless as a Spanish beggar." Something out of the common order of events appeared to animate the group; some were collected together apart, in earnest conversation; others were mounting horses and seampering off to the Casilda, whilst a party upon the house top were gazing through spy-glasses at the sea. The youth, before described, inquired of an individual who had just come down, and who closed his glass with a snap that shattered the instrument, exclaiming at the same time, 'Caraho, she's gone.'

The youth spoke to, mounted the steps and was quickly upon the parapet. Almost all the houses of Trinidad are constructed with flat roofs, with a parapet about three feet high, for the purpose of catching rain water during the wet senson.

A drift-like smoke rolled over the ocean and spread across the land to the mountain's base. At intervals, the surface of the sea, to the utmost limits of the wide extended hori-of the sea, to the utmost limits of the wide extended horizon, was distinctly visible, lashed into a foam, and whirled aloft in wreaths of spray from the tops of the curling waves.

Two vessels were distinctly seen, scudding before the wind under close recred topsails. Onward they both came, with the speed of race horses, the one further seaward, from the cut of her canvass and squareness of yard, evidently a man-of-war, in full chase; as she rose upon a swell, her long dark hull and line of ports were visible, from the bow at the same moment issued a volume of smoke, which as at the same moment issued a volume of smoke, which as suddenly was swept away by the wind, and mingled with the floating spray and haze, and ere the sound of the cannon had reached the shore, in low suppressed murmurs, the Spanish barque had rounded Pedro Blanco, dropt her visting and twiring about until it was lost in the haze that now covered every thing with an impenetrable veil; but ere the two vessels were closed from view, it was evident that he man of war had passed close under the stern of the slaver, and was riding upon the swell with four anchors alread.
The gale had now increased almost to a hurricane; it was with difficulty the youth could maintain his position on the parapet; he therefore descended to the store below, and mingled with the anxious group collected there.

It was conceded by all, that the Esperanza, for such yes the name of the slaver, was a gone case. If she ode out the gale, which was very improbable, the Sing, well known British eraiser, would certainly capture her, and it the hurricane increased, as there was every like.

A FORTUNE, FOUNDED ON A HURRICANE.

AF E. C. WATMOUGH.

The town of Trinidad, upon the south side of the island of Clube, presents a very picture-sque appearance from the sea. The dark blue mountains of St. Juan, rising to the height of three thousand feet, form the back ground of the picture, throwing the town into fine relief—with its white walls and turrets. At a distance, it appears like a white blue upon the mountain side, but the value of religion to the two points of the picture of the pic heaviest artillery, reverberated from the mountain's base, and was mingled with the roar of the wind and surf which pealed upon the shores of the neighboring islands, occasion-ally flashing up through the thick haze, pyramids of foam and spray.

After wading and floundering through ponds of water, un-After wading and floundering through ponds of water, under the lea of a large store, he encountered a fisherman by the name of Antonio, a hardy fellow, one of the best pilots of the port. To him he immediately made known his intentions, and offered a thousand dollars if he would accompany him with his boat on board the slaver.

"Why, Senor," said Antonio, "you must be mad. We should be swamped, for a dead certainty; and what good could we do, suppose we reached her?"

"I'll make your fortune!" was the prompt reply. "Does she still hold on?"

"Si, Senor."

Pil show you we can save her."

Still Antonio doubted, wavered; all the eloquence of argument, and stout assurances with scorn of danger, appeared not in the least to stagger his determination to decline the perilous adventure.

"Lend me your boat, then. By Heaven! Pil go alone; and when I meet you to morrow, with five thousand Spanish doubloons in my chest, you'll curse yourself for not having bad the ceurage to follow."

"Stop one moment. How much say you?"

At that instant a crash of thunder made the earth tremble beneath their feet, accompanied by a flash that pierced through the gloom, illuminating every object with a lurid glare, the foam flakes sailing through the air like myriads of floating brands of fire; at the same instant a transient glance was caught of the two vessels, recling and plunging glance was caught of the two vessels, recling and plunging was an expression which seemed to say—"let it blow the whole island over to Africa for aught I care; I have neither kith nor kin here, and am as pennyless as a Spanish beg. gar." Something out of the common order of events appeared to animate the group; some were collected together apart, in earnest conversation; others were mounting horses and scampering off to the Casilda, whilst a party upon the house top were gazing through spy-glasses at the sea. The youth, before described, inquired of an individual who had just come down, and who closed his glass with a snap that shattered the instrument, exclaiming at the same time, 'Caraho, she's gone."

"What is the matter, Senor! there seems to be a screw out of place somewhere, what is it?"

"Why, Senor, Americano, mio. There is a barque outside there, in which we are all interested—a good half million of freight, that is likely to be swamped by this infernal hurricane, or nabbed by John Bull, that's all."

The youth spoke to, mounted the steps and was quickly

The boat shot forth from her cover, and was immediately whirled round by the wind, one of the oars escaping from whirled round by the wind, one of the oars escaping from his hand; it was caught in a minute by his companion, ere the rower had time to utter the cry of terfor the accident occasioned. The sea was like a turbulent field of snow; the spray flew past them with terrible velocity—a single wave, ere it could lift its head on high, was cut off into foam, and mist and smoke; with the speed of an arrow shot from a bow, did they skim and gurr through the water. When the American cried out, "Starboard oar—hard a starboard" it was promptly obeyed, and the bark wheeled round the stern of the slaver, and as she touched her dark hull, the adventurers seized the mizen chains, and in less time than we have taken to describe it, were safely upon the deck; the boat being swamped beneath the gunwales of the ship as she being swamped beneath the gunwales of the ship as she rolled leeward. The storm was now at its height—the Captain was upon his knees crossing himself, and crying out to that God for mercy, whose divine precepts he had forgotten, when he entered into the dreadful traffic of his fellow men.

when he entered into the dreadful traffic of his fellow men.

At every plunge of the vessel, the water poured over the bows, and deluged the decks. From the bosom of the laboring craff, issued a yell of mingled agony and terror, from eight hundred souls confined below, which mingled with the blast, and must have been heard far inland by the distant Vega, who might fancy that a thousand fiends were shricking in the elemental strife above.

"Where's your axe—give it me. Antonio, take another.
Where is the cruiser! I see her—we can clear her. Hard sail—cut!" rapidly uttered the dauntless youth.

The cables were severed at a blow, the sail burst from the bolt ropes, the ship rose upon a roller crested with foam; carcened round before the blast; and under the impulse of the hurr, cane dashed madly towards the shore, passing the cruiser like a phantom, and disappearing amidst the haze and drift and surf, in a moment after she struck. A tremendous roller litted her again from the ground, and after several successive shocks, she plunged into comparatively smooth water. several successive shocks, she plunged into comparatively

The next morning the Esperanza, lay high and dry a half mile from the shore, and landed ner cargo in safety.—And before night the bold and pennyless adventurer was in possession of a hundred thousand dollars—his well-earned share of a cargo, valued at that time, at nearly four hundred thousand dollars, whilst the British cruiser was content to weigh anchor and renew his honorable efforts against a trade now almost universally denounced the worst of piracy.

The hero of our sketch has since acquired great wealth, and possesses an income of some two hundred thousand dollars per annum, and is a Grandee of Spain, with several title's of elistinction.

"Yes," replied the stranger, "but she will never come achore except in pieces. Look at that—there goes the roof off Don Vincenie's house, as clean as a whistle. The hurticane is up—if will tear that ship to pieces in less than an hour. I'll give you one hundred ounces for your share; and take my chance."

"Paga! it's a bargain?" cried the Spaniard; "Jehn Bull has get her, I believe already. La Esperanza must have drifted down upon her ere this."

Seven or eight shares were purchased upon the spot, and a bargain made with the others, who appeared to view our friend in no other light than a mad man, that if he saved the ship and cargo, he was to receive 25 per cent upon the gross.
